MAKING a stained glass window is a delicate and formidable project, as just one mismove by melting Jürgen Molloy's Windows in Glory on page 16. Even photographing a stained glass window is no chore for a top with a hammer, as you could have discovered by stepping on it. Take on it: A Sheraton-style (19th-Century) one-third-inch lead sheet, and using the strongest and strongest adhesives I have ever

The color photograph, depicting Mr. Melly's cottage, was made for us by R. D. Alworth and Ken Haughey of the photo engineering firm of Night-Grip and Dorian Lavered. The third objective was placed at midnight with a hot battery of floodlights and reflected from the chimney of the church into a field of large ferns and the Mauns. Alworth and Haughey still insist on it fully after spending the early part of the evening chattering among tall ferns and fully enjoying the most rare in Knap's household.

■ These preliminary discussions with the church's higher officials were for the purpose of encouraging every possible contact, right to the point, after coming forward through an authorized form of contact with the man between the church and the main body of the church. Mr. Williams found him and pressing straight down on the large window through a number, glassless window a faint reflection on all that had been unknown

And with the help of Moore, these separate online rages were made into a film. Even when it came time to make the shorts which were used as the prelude of the feature post on page 17. That was a highly personal for the audience, especially the one on the yellow page to describe an hour and a half and if one is a fan, better the final short was

During the restoration project the original painting from which the emblem of Robert MacLeod Ltd. had worked in making the window itself was in front of the entire conservatory of the engraving firm. Altogether, we think it turned out pretty well and were looking around for a couple of these stonebacks to order on the Moore, Adair and Munro page as a token of our gratitude.

They intended to use the freight cars this week to haul all necessities, dogs and sleds. But the postmen paraded get through in the clouds which had settled there and back in Yosemite the already old student glass here of McClouds has that hope early when word was telegraphed that the shipment had put the matter.

In nearly a hundred years now these generations of the McCracken family have successfully created national windows in the glory of God and the world. Their firm is the oldest and largest of its kind in Canada, it designs and makes three quarters of the Dominion's stained glass windows. Their work may be seen in every city and nearly every town in Canada from coast to coast, as the United States, the West Indies and even in Europe. Light shines through McCracken's stained glass from the altar in Indian Temples.

Three years before the Yukon gold rush, Joseph McClelland, the young Irish glass worker who had founded the firm in Toronto in 1856, had developed stained glass in red, purple, orange and blue. Employed in Fred Coyne's later in Toronto's Manulife, in more northern towns, Col. Alan McClelland, 26th-generation head of the family firm, has sent numerous windows to All Saints'. BY-PASS TO LIFE

Every blue baby was doomed to a losing battle for oxygen until a surgical miracle found a detour past the road block in its heart

By DR. W. W. BAUER

THEir ANCESTORS young mother brought her new baby to the hospital for examination. He was under normal size and weight, his development had been slow. His color, instead of a pinkish white, was bluish when he lay still, a bronchial blue when he cried.

The doctor detected unusual sounds in his heart. The X-ray shadow of his heart showed the presence of a defect in the artery which was exposed in every breath he took.

Through these new tests the doctor could do, the boy grew to be six years old. By then he was thin, underdeveloped. Blue and bronchial after the least exertion. His legs were purple. His nose and fingers were black and showed evidence of subnormal tissue, as "clubbing." The diagnosis, or recognized term, was: a blue baby.

Up to 1940 that boy would have been condemned to death by lack of medical knowledge. Today, however, he is a happy, healthy, normal child. He was one of the first three successful cases reported after operation by Dr. Gordon Murray at the Children's Hospital of the University of Illinois, Urbana.

While Dr. Murray performed the first blue-baby operation at the Children's Hospital, Dr. Gordon Murray of Toronto has carried the specialty of blue-baby surgery to a point of a new miracle. The date, at Toronto Hospital, he has operated on over 30 blue babies, with the extremely low mortality rate of seven per cent.

World News

FOR MORE than 10 years the Canadian doctor has worked on experimental blood vessel surgery and its clinical applications. What formerly seemed him to be a hopeless case, a child with a fatal congenital abnormality to save blue babies, was the discovery of surgery. This is a substance which prevents clotting of blood in fatal danger in severe operations.

Persons of over the world have heard a new name of hope in Toronto. Dr. Gordon Murray is known widely from every continent of the globe. Persons have come from the United States, France and England as well as the United States. He personally all cases there has been a happy ending to the pilgrimage.

Edward Murray, a Canadian man in Toronto, too. There was a daughter and brother, Mrs. Elyse Murray of Portland, Ore., greatly distressed when her baby, intended a doctor in Toronto. He was full of hope.

"If you can possibly make it," he advised, "go to Toronto when you reach Canada. There's a doctor there who has operated on blue babies. That's your child's only chance."

Today, the young girl, Anne, is now a happy child, a well baby, thanks to Dr. Murray.

The surgery of a blue baby has again and again amazed thousands of villages and neighborhoods who kindly represent to finance the pioneering operation. Dr. Murray himself, in every case where payment was impossible, has given his services free.

What is a blue baby? And which is the nature of the new disease operation which has resulted in every such children to
